

Reagan Set to Abolish Department of Energy If Congress Approves

By Howell Raines
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has approved a proposal to abolish the Department of Energy and transfer most of its surviving functions to the Department of Commerce, if Congress agrees, a White House spokesman said Thursday.

Mr. Reagan made the decision Wednesday morning to lodge the energy Department functions in a semi-autonomous agency within the Commerce Department, to be called the Energy Research and Technology Administration, according to Larry M. Speakes, deputy press spokesman. Mr. Reagan had promised in his campaign to eliminate the department, a creation of the Carter administration.

The production of nuclear weapons, which accounts for about half the $14.4-billion budget that energy officials requested for fiscal 1983, would be included in the new agency, continuing a policy of civilian control of the production of nuclear weapons.

The decision to house the energy programs in Commerce represents a reversal for Interior Secretary James G. Watt, who had lobbied strongly to have the programs transferred to his department. On Wednesday, an official who had spoken to Mr. Watt quoted him as saying, "I lost on this one, but I support the president."

Congress established the Energy Department in 1977, and congressional approval will be required to abolish it.

It was not clear what role, if any, would be played under the new arrangement by Energy Secretary James B. Edwards, who was hired with the understanding that his department, and therefore his job, would eventually be phased out in the Reagan administration.

Another question is whether Mr. Reagan will take similar action with the Department of Education, the second Cabinet agency he proposed abolishing in his campaign speeches.

Education Secretary Terrel H. Bell has proposed establishing a foundation to carry out the main functions of the department, with other duties, such as those relating to civil rights enforcement, being parceled out to Justice and other departments.

Trouble on Arms Seen

WASHINGTON (WP) — The decision to put nuclear weapons under the Commerce secretary is expected to run into serious trouble on Capitol Hill.

A letter sent to the president last week by 13 senators said that they "would strongly object" to moving the nuclear weapons program to the Commerce Department.

Instead, the letter suggested a "return to an agency much like the former Atomic Energy Commission, or the establishment of a semi-independent agency within the Defense Department."

A White House committee, according to informed sources, considered three proposals for the weapons program: attaching it to the Interior Department, a move favored by Mr. Edwards; making it independent, a solution supported by the Defense Department; and making it semi-autonomous but under the Commerce secretary, which reportedly was favored by Office of Management and Budget officials.

A major factor weighed against putting the program under the Defense Department, sources said. Such a move would violate a standard set during the first debates on the Atomic Energy Act in 1946 that the building of weapons should be controlled by civilians, not the military.

An argument working against the creation of an independent agency was the Reagan administration's pledge not to create new bureaucracies.

The weapons-building program consists of the two national nuclear laboratories at Los Alamos, N.M., and Livermore, Calif., plus the Sandia Laboratories, the nuclear test site in Nevada, nuclear material production reactors at Savannah River, S.C., Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Richland, Wash., and factories and weapons-assembly facilities at five sites across the country.

Alexeyeva Visits Her Own Parents

United Press International

MOSCOW — Liza Alexeyeva, the daughter-in-law of Soviet dissident Andrei D. Sakharov, has gone to Bronnitsy, 30 miles (48 kilometers) from Moscow, to say goodbye to her own parents, who reportedly disapproved of her leaving the Soviet Union.

Miss Alexeyeva, 26, was granted an exit visa after a 17-day hunger strike by Mr. Sakharov and his wife. She was preparing to fly to the United States at the end of the week.

During the hunger strike, the government newspaper Izvestia said that Miss Alexeyeva could not leave because her invalid parents would not give her permission.

Pact Reached in N.Y. Trash Strike

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A tentative settlement was announced Thursday in a 17-day strike by private sanitation workers after city trucks were dispatched under an emergency order to begin clearing up 100,000 tons of garbage.

Bernard Adelstein, business manager and secretary-treasurer of the striking Teamsters union, said details of the pact would be withheld pending a ratification vote. But he said his negotiating committee unanimously recommended acceptance by the 2,000 drivers and helpers.

Word of an agreement came after an all-night negotiating session spurred by the Board of Health's decree of a citywide health emergency. Acting under the emergency order, officials dispatched 200 city trucks during the morning to dig into tons of garbage piled on the streets by businesses and restaurants.

Sanitation Commissioner Norman Stiesel took the action after being told earlier that negotiators had run into what mediator James McCabe called a small impasse.

Chief Justice Proposes U.S. Jails Become 'Factories With Fences'

By Fred Barbash
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Chief Justice Warren E. Burger has proposed turning America's prisons into "factories with fences" where inmates work, get paid and contribute to their room and board.

In a speech Wednesday at the University of Nebraska in Lincoln, Mr. Burger said that as a matter of "compassion" and as "a hard matter of our own protection," it must be acknowledged that the old approach to prisons has failed to control crime or rehabilitate criminals.

"The reality is that if we are to fulfill one of the most fundamental obligations of government — the protection of people and homes — there must be both more effective law enforcement and a drastic change in our prison systems," he said. "Just more stone, more steel for walls and bars will not solve or even improve these dismal conditions."

Mr. Burger's speech continues a theme pursued off the bench by the chief justice for several years. It comes when both states and the federal government are discussing large increases in spending for prison construction as a way of dealing with crime.

"No Guarantees"

Mr. Burger said his plan would require repeal of laws in many states that limit prison production, and also would require a change in the fear among business and organized labor of subsidized competition.

Probe of Ex-Agents' Role in Libya Raises Questions on CIA Conduct

By Philip Taubman and Jeff Gerth
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the House Select Committee on Intelligence says that the panel's investigation into the activities of two former U.S. intelligence agents has raised serious questions about the conduct and policies of the CIA.

The chairman, Rep. Edward P. Boland, Democrat of Massachusetts, said that the committee's inquiry into the activities of Edwin P. Wilson and Frank E. Terpil, two former employees of the CIA who have been charged with illegally shipping explosives to Libya, had dealt with the agency's apparent inability to control businesses it secretly owned and to maintain the security of its operations.

The investigation also focused on agency policies governing contacts between current and former employees and on the capacity of the CIA to conduct internal investigations of reports of abuses by its staff.

These and other issues examined by the committee will be the subject of public hearings early next year, said Rep. Boland, who provided a status report on the panel's investigation in an interview Wednesday.

He said the investigation had not yet found answers to several questions raised by the activities of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Terpil, including whether the CIA, directly or indirectly, approved their work in Libya.

Several senior Justice Department and intelligence officials suspect that senior officials at the CIA, acting without the consent of superiors, gave tacit approval to the Libyan venture in 1976 in hope that it would produce intelligence information otherwise unavailable to the United States.

The CIA has repeatedly denied any official involvement in the activities of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Terpil. Dale Peterson, an agency spokesman, said Wednesday that the CIA would make no comment on the House committee's investigation until it was completed and the agency had been fully informed about its findings.

Indicted Last Year

Rep. Boland said the committee and the CIA had also been investigating whether those officials disclosed sensitive intelligence information to Mr. Wilson without authorization to help his business operations abroad.

Mr. Wilson and Mr. Terpil were indicted last year by a federal grand jury after investigations by at least five federal agencies. Both are fugitives. Mr. Wilson lives in Libya and Mr. Terpil was last known to reside in Beirut.

Rep. Boland said the committee staff had conducted more than 100 interviews since it began work three months ago. He said the first goal was to trace the careers of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Terpil, their association with the CIA after they left government service, and the handling of their case by federal agencies, including the FBI, the Defense Department and the CIA.

Quality of Probes

"It's clear that the CIA and the FBI didn't do a thorough job of investigating allegations about Wilson and Terpil when they were first brought to the government's attention," Rep. Boland said.

The quality of investigations has improved recently, he added, noting that the CIA had opened its files to the committee staff and had conducted its own "broad-ranging" review of the case and related matters.

Rep. Boland said that the intelligence agency "should have adopted a code of ethics for its employees a long time ago." He said he hoped the agency would do so in the near future.

History-Making U.S. Congress Left A Lot to Be Done in Next Session

servatives were conspicuously unsuccessful in pushing their agenda of social issues beyond dealmaking debate on the Senate floor where, in one of the ironies of the year, liberals used the old Southern conservatives' weapon of a filibuster to block new offensives from the right.

Another surprise was the general impotence of the mainstream Democrats, who seemed to adjust less easily to losing power than the Republicans did to gaining it, losing a seemingly endless string of votes to the Reagan-style "conservative coalition." But they show signs of rebounding, strengthened by signs of Mr. Reagan's vulnerability as the administration heads into its second year.

Rule Changes

Regardless of what happens next, however, the institutional rules and procedures of Congress were bent to such an extent to accommodate Mr. Reagan that Congress may be facing permanent changes in the way it operates.

The process of budget "reconciliation," by which committees are instructed to cut ongoing programs, proved an easy way to package and expedite hundreds of individual spending cuts and program changes. And delays in the regular appropriations process, necessitated by continual budget cutting, had the entire government operating on a stopgap, catchall "continuing resolution" for several months.

Almost totally overshadowed in the first year were issues of foreign policy. Congress passed a foreign aid bill and Mr. Reagan won approval of his proposed sale of sophisticated radar planes to Saudi Arabia, but most of the focus was on domestic policy, specifically on budget cuts.

There was also relatively little controversy over the military, as Congress accepted nearly all of Mr. Reagan's spending increases, and anticipated fights over his proposals to go ahead with the MX missile system and B-1 bomber failed to materialize.

It was in the domestic arena that nearly all the blood was spilled.

Slashed or Killed

Almost every domestic program was slashed and some were killed, although some of the biggest pork-barrel projects, such as the Tennessee-Tombigbee waterway and Tennessee's Clinch River breeder reactor, emerged unscathed — thanks to Tennessee's Sen. Baker and other powerful officials.

The Labor Department's costly public service jobs program, which once employed 700,000 people, was ended. Unemployment insurance rules were tightened.

Medicaid payments to the states were cut by about $1 billion. Medicare was cut by about $1 billion, with some of the savings resulting from beneficiaries paying higher charges for services.

Interest rates were raised for loans to small businesses, postal subsidies were cut and Conrail and Amtrak were slashed. The Legal Services Corp. has survived, so far, but its activities will probably be curbed.

Food stamps were cut by $1.7

billion, eliminating more than 1 million people from the rolls. Aid to Families with Dependent Children was cut heavily, and states were allowed to set up "workfare" programs to require work in exchange for welfare. New subsidized housing units were cut by nearly half and rents for tenants were increased. Funding for school lunches and other child nutrition programs was drastically reduced.

Impact aid to school districts with large numbers of government employees was sharply reduced. Grants to low-income college students were reduced.

But Mr. Reagan failed to achieve the big breakthrough for the "new federalism" block-grant program that he wanted. Some of the largest programs, such as school aid for disadvantaged children, remained intact if somewhat poorer.

Mr. Reagan's biggest budget failure in Congress was its refusal even to consider major cuts in Social Security. After cutting the $122-a-month minimum benefit, Congress, with Mr. Reagan joining in the about-face, changed its mind under a storm of protest and restored the benefit. Mr. Reagan proposed other major benefit cuts but withdrew the proposal when it, too, met with stormy opposition.

Envoy Hints at Easing Of China Resistance to U.S.-Taiwan Arms Deal

By Robert C. Torch
Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON — Peking's ambassador to the United States has said that the extent of damage done to Chinese-American relations by a U.S. arms sale to Taiwan would depend on "the nature and amount" of the weapons. The statement appeared to signal a significant moderation of his government's previous firm opposition to any such sale.

State Department officials said Ambassador Chai Zemin's remark to the Washington Press Club on Wednesday marked the first time that China had qualified its opposition to a U.S. arms sale to Taiwan.

By saying China's reaction will be commensurate with the specifics of the deal, Mr. Zemin appeared to suggest that Peking is now reconciled to the sale of some new fighter planes to Taiwan but wishes to keep the transaction as small as possible, officials said.

Taiwan has requested new planes such as Northrop's F-5G or General Dynamics' F-16.

Former Position

Peking's position on the sale, repeated as recently as November, has been that sale of weapons, of whatever type, would constitute a violation of China's sovereignty and an intervention in China's internal affairs. Peking threatened to downgrade relations with the United States if sales are made.

Argentine Parties Call for Elections

United Press International

BUENOS AIRES — Argentina's five major political parties have demanded that the military regime call free general elections and disclose the fate of thousands of people who have disappeared since 1975.

The return to normality should begin right now by lifting of restrictions on the activities of political parties and labor organizations," the five parties said in a 17-page document issued Wednesday.

The presidents of the powerful Peronist party, the Radical party, the Intransigent party, the Christian Democrats and the Movement for Integration and Development signed the statement, issued six days after the military junta ousted former army commander Gen. Roberto Viola as president and replaced him with Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri. In recent months the government has eased a ban on political parties and labor union activities.

Until now, officials said, Peking's representatives have refused to distinguish between the kinds of arms that might be sold, saying that their opposition was to "the principle" of the sale.

Mr. Zemin at first repeated that opposition "on principle" Wednesday, saying that relations between Peking and Washington "will stagnate or even backslide" in the event of an arms sale to Taiwan.

But when asked to predict Peking's reaction, he said "it will depend on the content of the arms sale." He later said "it will be determined by the circumstances, in light of the nature and amount of sales."

The sale of a new fighter to Taiwan could test the new relationship between Peking and Washington.

Taiwan Worried

Taiwan is worried that the United States, which normalized relations with Peking in 1979 by breaking its official ties with the Chinese Nationalists, may gradually desert it militarily in spite of President Reagan's statements of support.

Peking, for its part, wants the United States to recognize that its new "strategic relationship" — an arrangement aimed in part at the Soviet Union — is more important than old ties to the Nationalists.

In an effort to find a compromise, U.S. officials have practically ruled out sale of the high performance F-16 and instead have suggested selling Taiwan a more advanced version of the best plane it now has, the Northrop F-5E, with possible sale of the longer-range G model in the future if relations between Taiwan and Peking worsen.

Chinese Message to U.S.

PEKING (AP) — China's leading newspaper said Thursday that the United States will only hurt itself by supporting "unpopular old friends" — a reference to both Israel and Taiwan.

"Israel's declaration that it is annexing the Golan Heights is one more lesson for the United States," said a commentary in the People's Daily by its Washington correspondent, Yuan Xianlu.

"The question now is whether the United States truly can learn something from this," he added.

Making clear that he was talking about more "old friends" than just Israel, Mr. Yuan said, "Resisting the trend of the times and supporting unpopular 'old friends' doing evil things ultimately is bound to harm the 'old friends' and oneself too."

Claud Cockburn, Leftist British Writer And Social Commentator, Is Dead at 77

New York Times Service

DUBLIN — Claud Cockburn, 77, a British journalist and social critic whose lively style made him something of a cult figure on the British political left, died on Tuesday. Mr. Cockburn lived in Ardmore, Ireland.

Mr. Cockburn (pronounced Coo-burn), a leftist journalist of the 1930s, left the British Communist Party after World War II. He wrote a number of books and articles, some under the pseudonym James Halvick. His best-known works were reflections on the 1930s, including his memoirs. In recent years, he contributed to Punch and to Private Eye, the British satirical weekly.

Mr. Cockburn had been a widely respected foreign correspondent for The Times of London in Washington and New York from 1929 to 1932, when he quit to join The Daily Worker, a Communist paper in London. He then founded his own anti-Fascist paper in 1933, The Week. It was banned in 1941, along with The Daily Worker, for its persistent sniping at the British war effort.

His books included "Beat the Devil," which was made into a film directed by John Huston and featuring Humphrey Bogart and Peter Lorre.

Mr. Cockburn was the father of Alexander Cockburn, who writes for the Village Voice and The Wall Street Journal. He was a descendant of Adm. Sir George Cockburn, who helped burn down the White House in the War of 1812.

China Embraces New Newspaper in English

Bureaucrats Brush Up Language Skills and Foreigners Get Hockey Scores

By Christopher S. Wren
New York Times Service

PEKING — Anyone who wants National Hockey League scores along with news of the Xinjiang cotton harvest, the latest results of basketball tournaments in New York and light industry in Shanghai, tips on bridge-playing and bridge-building, need look no further than a newspaper called China Daily.

As mainland China's first English-language newspaper since the Nationalists shut down their press and fled to Taiwan in 1949, China Daily has become a success six months after it started formal publication, with a circulation up from an initially cautious 20,000 copies to 50,000 today.

It was devised for foreigners, but two-thirds of its readership is Chinese, often ranking bureaucrats, who brush up on their English while enjoying a less restricted view of the world than is normally found in the Chinese press.

"Our newspaper is mainly geared to foreign readers," said Guan Zaihan, who serves on the China Daily editorial board. "That's why we serve so much foreign news. But we also want to tell our foreign friends about China."

China Daily prints overseas news from foreign wire services, domestic news from the Chinese news agency and merciful abridgments of the verbose ideological exhortations that fill the Chinese-language papers.

The resulting mix is lively if sometimes curious. Last week, China Daily related at some length the tale of a married medical student in Shanghai who was expelled for adultery after he began spending his nights with an undergraduate notorious for her "bourgeois ideology." The adjacent story was a report on an animal husbandry farm that had increased profits twentyfold in five years by giving the peasants more responsibility.

China Daily is considered a "sister publication" of People's Daily, the Communist Party paper, and occupies the same compound in Peking, the gate of which is guarded by a soldier with a fixed bayonet.

Bicycles are parked in the building hallway. Upstairs, one of the English-language signs cautions: "Do not fall into bad habits. The easy way is quite often the incorrect way."

While China Daily has been subsidized by a loan from People's Daily and is printed on its new English offset presses, the newspaper has avoided the self-conscious propaganda image that China's other English-language publications project.

"We have a different readership, very different from People's Daily," said Zheng Defang, a deputy editor who learned her profession at the Chinese news agency. "If we tried to preach, you know what the reaction would be."

Party Is the Guide

She added: "This paper is run in China, and China is a country where the party leads, so any paper printed in China would be broadly speaking under the leadership of the party."

Mr. Guan, who was a Professional Journalism Fellow at Stanford University several years ago, explained: "We are not a party organ and we do try to be as objective as we can. In other words, we don't deviate from the party line but we do have our own editorial policy."

The newspaper's resulting soft sell offers something for almost everyone. China-based diplomats and journalists increasingly rely on it to catch developments that they missed in the Chinese-language press. Tourists get two pages of sports news as well as overseas news, even a daily crossword puzzle.

The managing editor, Feng Nilang, has encouraged the young staff, which is mostly recruited from foreign language institutes, to write feature articles.

There have been recent interviews with a 96-year-old master of taijiquan, the meditative shadow boxing; a landscape artist; and a man who collects Ming Dynasty furniture. Other features have explained the arcane theatrics of classical Peking opera and, among other food recipes, have shared hints on how to catch and cook a turtle.

China Daily gets about 100 letters a week from readers, and the comments offer an insight into what concerns the Chinese. One expressed shock the other day that some young women were having their ears pierced, a practice that was equated with the binding of feet. Two other readers complained that the Chinese habit of spitting on the ground was giving foreigners a bad impression.

ARTS/LEISURE

Accessories: The Artisans' Wave

By Hebe Dorsey
International Herald Tribune
NEW YORK — Accessories — belts and bags, scarves and sashes, hats and hairpieces...

Long cranked out by big companies that believed in making them by the millions, American accessories are now a different story...

Call it another American success story. What was once a French specialty has now passed to the other side of the Atlantic. One could even argue that the demise of French couture coincided with the disappearance of its fashion artisans. Only 20 years ago, Paris was full of parviers, or adorners, creating original ornaments...

Add to that the world of difference between European and American women. According to Joan Kanner, Bergdorf Goodman's fashion director, European customers are investment oriented...

Henri Bendel's head accessory buyer, Claire Nicholson, who has been developing the small accessory designer business for the last 10 years, said: "The creativity of the designers is responsible for the growth of this business..."

Belts and Handbags

She cited two standouts in Bendel's current stable: Barry Kieselstein, whose claim to fame is the Western Winchester belt, owned by Cher, Yves Saint Laurent...

Americans are sensitive to art in accessories and will think nothing of paying $500 and up for well-crafted metal or wood pieces...

Another reason for that thriving accessory market is that U.S. fashions are simpler, cleaner-cut than European ones. It is very easy to wear accessories with a basic Halston. It would be much more difficult to wear them with European clothes...

Everybody agrees that the 1971 Coty award winner, Elsa Peretti, played an important role in establishing dramatic, modern art accessories. Born in Florence, Peretti creates sculptured, organic and sensual jewelry of great strength and beauty. After 12 years working for Fernando Sanchez, she moved to Halston and she has had her niche at Tiffany's since 1974. Her most famous number is a black leather belt, the buckle a huge silver horseshoe...

Now, New York is seething with young artisans who live in midtown lofts and do their own thing. Here is a rundown on the most important ones.

BOBBY BRESLAU, whose signature is a huge, soft leather bag carried by practically every chic model on both sides of the Atlantic. Also known as the Big Pouch, and first shown with Halston's collection in 1973, it has become a classic and was put by the Smithsonian into its permanent exhibit...

BARBARA BOLAN is American but has based her bag industry in Florence, where she and her husband, Henry, spend about half the year. Bolan is known for beautifully crafted leather bags, one of which is shaped like a rolled baby pillow...

ROBERT LEE MORRIS, a German-born sculptor who functions from his downtown gallery, Artwear, and is one of the best sculptor-jewelers around. His work had been previously sold at Arts to Wear, a similar gallery that opened in 1972...

The Hard Times of Anita O'Day

By Michael Zwerin

PARIS — Anita O'Day has a dirty voice. She spawned a school of dirty voices including June Christy and Chris Connors. The dirt in their voices is like a trumpeter's growl or a trombone with a plunger-mute...

Her professional life as told with George Bell's in her autobiography "High Times Hard Times" (Putnam) begins in bleak '30s Chicago with a an inattentive mother and a teen-ager's attempt to escape depression by joining the Walkathon (dance marathon) circuit...

Then one day she felt a "presence." He had long hair, a beard, wore white clothes. He asked her what she wanted to do in life and, though until that moment she had only toyed with the idea, "I didn't hesitate. 'I'd like to sing,' I said."

In 1941, at the age of 22, she became the hot new "canary" with Gene Krupa's band. This was on a level with joining The Eagles today. One of the few white singers black musicians respected, her duet with Roy Eldridge on Krupa's "Let Me Off Uptown" made all the jukeboxes...

After singing with Vido Musso and Stan Kenton, she started a solo career and began to win polls.

U.S. Women Making Gains In Blue-Collar Job Fields

By Carol Krucoff
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — "While America's imagination has been captured by women entering the professional world, they've been making even more dramatic gains in the blue-collar work force," says sociologist Mary Lindenstein Walshok.

Despite the attention paid to fields like science, medicine and law, "census data show that it is in jobs such as carpentry and small-appliance repair, auto mechanics, plumbing, electronics and office-machine services that the greatest rates of change seem to be occurring."

Good pay, interesting work and the possibility of setting their own hours, Walshok adds, are major reasons for the boom in blue-collar women. Although women still represent only about 18 percent of blue-collar workers, "their rate of increase in the skilled trades is impressive," she says...

But in a society with a "hidden class consciousness," Walshok says, "blue-collar women are still viewed as social oddities. Despite the disillusionment with formal education, the resurgence of interest in working with one's hands, in being outdoors and in being physically fit, we are surprised when anyone — much less a woman — articulates positive feelings about manual labor."

Walshok followed the lives of about 100 "blue-collar pioneers" over a four-year period, examining their backgrounds, attitudes, experiences, successes and failures. To succeed in this "male frontier," she concludes in her book "Blue-Collar Women" (Anchor Books), a woman "must have strong reasons for making such a move, and either compelling needs or a great deal of confidence to back up her decision."

Her reputation leaped after her starring segment in Bert Stern's Newport Festival film documentary, "Jazz on a Summer's Day." But along with success came stress and neither music nor a succession of lovers could heal it. She found alcohol and heroin...

She had 13 abortions and the reader comes away amazed at how much abuse a female body can take. O'Day was a source of big band folklore, much of which she denies: "That rumor about me and the entire Kenton band is untrue."

She has graceful insights on the world of people like Kenton, Benny Goodman and Norman Graza, all three of whom she dislikes. Portraits of her world are two-dimensional. Kenton did not understand her. Krupa was a nice guy. Barbra Streisand just loved Anita, as did Judy Garland. The ambience of one club is described memorably: "The Vanguard is a groovy place."

Drug-related incidents about Garland, Charlie Parker and Erroll Garner seem to be thrown in out of context, along with dubious medical reporting — "Poor Erroll developed lung cancer from his [heroin] habit."

The punch line comes from O'Day's longtime agent Joe Glaser: "Anita, you've got a million dollars' worth of talent and no class."

On the other hand Boris Vian's "Ecrits sur le jazz" (Christian Bourgois) has a great deal of both. Through combining liberty of language and a fresh snappy American-influenced style, Vian invented modern French journalism as represented by such publifications as Charlie Hebdou and Avu-tel. He was at the center of the existentialist scene in Saint-Germain-des-Prés after World War II and such novels as "L'Automne à Bézu" and "L'Herbe Rouge" are still read by French youth.

More than any other jazz critic he translated the swing and joy of jazz into prose. This book contains his passionate and humorous writings from the magazine Jazz Hot and the newspaper Combat in the '40s and '50s. He died of a heart ailment in 1959, aged 39.

A 1948 allegory referring to the furious and he thought irrelevant debate then going on in French jazz circles about the worth of bebop, begins with a visit from Goebbels who greets Vian, "Heil Gillespie!" Vian asks Goebbels about Göring, who it seems is not dead at all but "playing bongos in the UN bebop band."

In a "jazz catechism," one question is, "Does Louis Armstrong have more talent than Gillespie?" The ironic answer: "Anyone who mentions Louis Armstrong and Gillespie in the same sentence is ignorant."

He analyzes trumpeter Charlie Shavers: "Shavers, maybe I'm making a big mistake, but you are obviously not homosexual. On the other hand, unless I'm making another mistake, you are also not faithful to your Jubie."

But jazz criticism is not famous for its creativity. Even lightweight Vian is heavier than most of the rest. Although his jazz writing has not been translated into English, the French is basic enough to be understood by those with elementary knowledge of the language.

U.S. Outlines Proposal On Atlantic Air Fares

By Carol Shifrin
WASHINGTON — U.S. negotiators have offered to give Western European and U.S. airlines an "extremely" generous proposal on transatlantic routes if the European nations would allow all airlines a broad band of pricing flexibility within which to set fares without government approval on major routes.

U.S. sources said that Eric Willoch, ECAC president and director-general of civil aviation of Norway, responded initially for the Europeans, calling the proposal "extremely" generous. Although the meeting participants are the civil aviation officials of their respective governments, an agreement would require formal approval from each government.

Air France To Purchase Boeing Jets

PARIS — Air France Thursday announced plans to buy 12 Boeing 737 jet airplanes for about $180 million.

The proposal would not affect the liberal bilateral agreements the United States has with some countries to provide airlines with a totally open pricing regime, but is intended to give airlines operating more restrictive countries more flexibility, sources said.

The state-run airline, which plans to use the aircraft for short- and medium-range European routes, announced the plan after receiving approval from the government and the carrier's directors.

Without mentioning IATA, the U.S. proposal would specifically prohibit parties to the agreement from taking any action to prevent or require participation by any carrier in "multilateral tariff coordination" or make participation a condition for approval of any fare.

Under the U.S. proposal, three different zones of flexibility for each pair of U.S.-European cities would be set up. Using existing unrestricted coach fares as a base, the first zone would allow airlines to set first-class and business-class fares anywhere within 60 percent above the coach-fare base. The premium fares could not go lower than the coach fare.

U.S. Says Trade Curb, Subsidies Not Answer to Problems of EEC

WASHINGTON — Presenting a grim picture of deteriorating U.S.-European economic relations, a key State Department official has charged some Common Market governments with trying to solve pressing domestic problems through import restrictions or export subsidies that affect the United States.

Exports and proposed restrictions on imports of U.S. farm products, Reuters reported. [While admitting that no specific form of trade retaliation was being considered, he said, "We will retaliate in some way."] Mr. Hornats has just returned from a round of talks with European Community leaders in Brussels. He said that "in their weakened state, some European governments cannot, or are reluctant to, take unpopular corrective measures, and are finding it more difficult to resist pressures to solve domestic problems through import restrictions or export subsidies."

Bonds Gaining Favor as U.S. Recession Deepens

NEW YORK — The deep, 2.1-percent drop in monthly industrial production announced Wednesday has fortified the belief among some Wall Street economists that the recession could be deeper than previously anticipated.

The recent rally in bonds has slowed in the last week as investors reacted to an expanded estimate of the federal deficit and a surprising large increase in the money supply. But analysts say neither of these may be as important as the private demand for credit, which is deteriorating rapidly.

Edward Yardeni, an economist for E.F. Hutton, said he expects government financing to expand $35 billion next year, while private credit contracts $75 billion, meaning less net overall demand. "In this recession, private demand for credit will be driven down sufficiently so that we can still have an expanded deficit and lower rates at the same time," Mr. Yardeni said.

Wall Street Prices Advance Despite Year-End Buffeting

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed slightly higher Thursday. Investors continued to exhibit concern about the deteriorating economy and the escalating crisis in Poland.

The Dow Jones industrial average was slightly lower most of the day but gained strength near the close and finished up 1.81 points to 370.53. Advances edged declines, 790 to 720, as volume rose to 47 million shares from 42.4 million Wednesday.

Individual investors may not be able to get in and out over six months without giving up a lot of their investment to dealers, who generally charge higher markups for small buy orders and offer better prices on large sell orders.

SAN FRANCISCO — Intel Corp. said Thursday it had agreed with Lloyd's of London on a framework to settle all claims between the companies relating to the obligations of Intel's former computer lease financing business, which was insured by Lloyd's.

Intel said the agreement will be subject to the approval of the U.S. bankruptcy court, under which it filed for protection under Chapter 11 in January.

U.S. Payments Show $2.1-Billion Surplus

WASHINGTON — The U.S. surplus in foreign trade of goods and services grew to a seasonally adjusted $2.1 billion in the third quarter of this year — the fifth straight quarterly surplus, the Commerce Department reported Thursday.

Despite the relatively strong performance on the current account, government officials warned the current account is likely to fall into deficit next year.

Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel, echoing an earlier statement by Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, said the United States will probably experience a current-account deficit next year, reflecting West European gains in competitiveness from past currency depreciations.

Producers of durable goods operated at 71.9 percent capacity in November, down from 75 percent in October. The utilization rate of non-durable goods materials producers fell to 78.7 percent from 80.7 percent.

Mr. Baldrige said Thursday that he too expects the recovery to begin in the 1982 second half, with growth running somewhere between three and five percent and stimulated by falling inflation and interest rates.

During the first three quarters of 1981 the United States ran a total current account surplus of $6.5 billion, compared with a $3.72-billion surplus in all of 1980.

WHEN BAD THINGS HAPPEN TO GOOD PEOPLE

By Harold S. Kushner. 149 pp. $10.95. Schocken Books, 200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016.

Reviewed by Joseph McLellan

"I HAVE to believe in God," someone once told Rabbi Harold Kushner, "so that I have someone to blame, someone to curse and shout at, when I think of what I've gone through..."

at least partial answers, can a rabbi from a Boston suburb hope to make a fresh contribution? Harold Kushner felt that at least he had to try, after the death of his son, Aaron, from a rare disease called progeria, "rapid aging," which gives children the symptoms of old age and kills them in their early years.

His subject is one of the basic concerns of those who choose to believe in a benevolent and all-powerful god, and it has filled many a heavier volume than this without reaching any solution satisfactory to all shades of religious belief.

Part of the question is relatively easy for him. In cases involving human folly and wickedness, which can range from an auto accident to Hiroshima or Auschwitz, there is some kind of answer: God, for philosophical reasons, refuses to tamper with human freedom.

The problem hardly existed for those ancient, polytheistic cultures as those of Greece, Rome and Scandinavia. Their gods tended to be people much like themselves — larger-than-life humans who got drunk, lied, cheated, stole and indulged in fornication with hardly a thought for the happiness or fair treatment of mere mortals in the world below.

This explanation will comfort and enlighten some readers, while others, who must believe in an all-powerful god, will dismiss it as a step backward toward paganism, a god something like Thor and Zeus, who also tried to do the best they could but had problems of their own.

At another extreme is the solution offered by such thinkers as Mary Baker Eddy: If there is an omnipotent and benevolent god, clearly evil does not exist and those who seem to possess it are simply in error.

One of the most original contributions to the millennial dialogue on the subject was that of Zoroaster, who developed the concept of dualism: The benevolent deity is not the only supernatural power at work in the world; there is a power of darkness that also wins at least occasional and limited victories, and there is a cosmic struggle underway between these two powers.

New Kind of Chili Is a Mild Success For Texas Growers

Holmes to Fight Cooney March 15

NEW YORK — At the microphone in the Terrace Room of New York's Plaza Hotel, the hype had begun. Ring-side seats would be a "baggy" at $600 in the parking lot at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, "that oasis in the desert," the promoter, Don King, had shrilled, "that palace of hedonistic pleasure..."

Both Undefeated Cooney is 25 years old, undefeated in 25 bouts, with 21 knockouts. In his last appearance, he needed only 54 seconds to finish Ken Norton; in his previous appearance, he needed less than a round to finish Ron Lyle. "I think Holmes is a good fighter," Cooney said, "but I think I'm better."

"If I was Snipes, Larry Holmes wouldn't have stayed the champ that night," Cooney said. "I think Snipes got too excited, that's what lost the fight for him." Holmes was at the microphone now, poised and dapper in a dark brown suit with a striped brown tie. He had driven up through the snow from his home in Easton, Pa., for his first promotional confrontation with Cooney, tall and trim in a gray suit. Holmes once was Muhammad Ali's sparring partner, but now he is accepted as

Baseball's Lurking Money Scheme 'Carving Up the Major Leagues Like a Christmas Turkey'

NEW YORK — One of the least appetizing, and most probably profitable schemes to attract the baseball intellect since the designated hitter was brought up before the recent convention in Florida and stowed on a shelf until next summer. There it lurks, a menace. The proposal calls for carving up the major leagues like a Christmas turkey, separating the National and American into three divisions each, with a wild card admission a fourth team into a postseason-playoff. Thus the tournament designate a team as champion of North America would involve, as it did in 1981, a double round of play-offs to qualify contestants for the World Series, followed by the main event between league champions.

NHL in Uproar Over Penalty Imposed for Hitting Referee

From Agency Dispatches MONTREAL. A lawyer for the NHL officials has advised referees to refrain from working games or breaking up fights if the National Hockey League rejects their appeal of what he termed a "grossly inadequate" penalty handed to Paul Holmgren of the Philadelphia Flyers for striking an official. Holmgren was suspended for five games and fined $500 for striking Andy Van Hellemond during a game last week between the Flyers and Pittsburgh Penguins. "I'm so upset I can barely talk," Van Hellemond said of the penalty. The decision was announced Wednesday by NHL executive vice president, Brian O'Neill, following a hearing in Toronto the day before. The suspension was levied in addition to the automatic two-game suspension that PHOENIX (AP) — Thomas Hearns will have a rematch with Sugar Ray Leonard for the undisputed world welterweight championship sometime next September, but first he will fight Marvin Hagler for the middleweight title in April, Hearns' trainer-manager, Emmanuel Steward, said. Steward did not reveal the specifics of the proposed title fights or their sites, but he said that negotiations have been under way in both camps for some time. He added that Hearns and Leonard would both be guaranteed a minimum payoff of $12 million for a rematch.

The Wizard of Ooze

BY RUSSELL BAKER
NEW YORK — It's a good thing they made "The Wizard of Oz" into a movie when they did, because the film business couldn't do it nowadays.

The same thing goes for "A Christmas Carol" by Charles Dickens. If Dickens had let that one pass so somebody could write it in 1981, it would never have been written.

the Wizard to rock music and make anybody care much, any more than Mick Jagger could pack Madison Square Garden by singing "In the Gloaming."

Who interrupts it but a wicked witch of the west? We could get Ethel Merman for that. Dorothy tells Ethel she wants to go to the Emerald City, which cues Ethel to do her Mailgram number.

Mr. Bellow's Planet: Getting It Right

By Michiko Kakutani
New York Times Service
CHICAGO — "I sometimes enjoy saying that anybody's life can be encompassed in about 10 wonderful jokes. One of my favorites is about an American singer who makes his debut at La Scala. He sings his first aria to great applause. The crowd calls 'Ancoera.' He sings it a second time, and again they call for an encore. Then a third time and a fourth. Finally, panting and exhausted, he asks, 'How many times must I sing this aria?' Then someone tells him, 'Until you get it right.' That's how it is with me — I always feel I haven't gotten it quite right, and so I go on singing."

Saul Bellow

shared a certain depressive quality. "Angie March," was wildly extroverted, ending with his hero looking forward to his next adventure. Later books would go somewhat further and would also play, with greater facility, between what Bellow refers to as "the two sides of my psyche" — the brooding side and the embarras.

Seismologist Richter Is Shaken but Unhurt

Seismologist Charles Richter was rescued by sheriff's deputies who said they found him dazed in a canyon near Pasadena, Calif., six hours after his disabled car plunged into a stream bed. Officials at Huntington Memorial Hospital said Richter was being treated for exhaustion and exposure. The 81-year-old scientist was feeling well enough to report from his hospital bed. "I'm fine — I'll be around for awhile." Richter's name is one of the best known in the field of seismology. He is co-creator of the Richter scale, the measurement of earthquake magnitudes now used throughout the world.

What woman wouldn't want Paul Newman to cook for her? Sally Field, for one. When she was on the set in south Florida last spring making "Absence of Malice," she found herself in the middle of a cooking contest among Newman, director Sydney Pollack and producer Ron Osborn. "I'm sure they didn't think it funny — were they really cook-offs," she told McCall's magazine. "They'd try to outdo each other with their meals. They really were serious." She took to sneaking meals in her mobile home. She said of Newman, "He's really a dear, generous man — and such a wise connoisseur. I'd have to hide my bottle of cheap Soave whenever he came by."
